Join Kevin for “VISION: A world created, not captured!” to hear, AND SEE, the creative world that exists within Kevin’s imagination. You will see before and after images, hear the story behind how they came to be, and witness just how far a photograph can travel in its development. His world is certainly unique in that not only is it black & white, but otherworldly, ethereal, and some might say majestic. Kevin’s Bio:

Kevin is an internationally recognized fine art black and white photographer residing in Charleston, South Carolina. Along with being named the Professional Photographers of South Carolina ‘Photographer of the Year’ in 2017, he has received awards from such international organizations as the SeeMe Exposure Awards™, ND Awards™, and the esteemed IPA™ (International Photography Awards).

His work has a primary focus on architecture, landscape, and long-exposure minimalism, where it is noted for its attention to simple elements, leading lines, and negative space. Kevin attributes this attention to his background studies in graphic design, as well as his primary studies in film production at the University of Georgia, where he earned his degree. He is also known for mentoring local photographers by helping them develop the technical aspects of image-capture and processing while also expressing their artistic vision; he believes that without vision, nothing else matters!

For Kevin, it’s not just the capture and processing of the image that’s important; he has always believed that no photograph is 100% complete without a physical manifestation of it... the print. Working methodically and producing a smaller crop of images per year than many others, his attention is engaged on the final display of fine art. You can rest assured if you have a limited-edition print by Kevin Holliday, it has been handled from start to finish with the goal of being displayed on the wall and enjoyed for a lifetime.
